

INTERNATIONAL SEMINAR

Measurement of Social Exclusion generated by Western Criminal Policies

14th December 2018

Sala de Juntas. Faculty of Law. University of Malaga

Aim of this International Seminar is to present to an expert audience the results of the RIMES Research Project and the objectives of a new research project called AP-RIMES.

The RIMES project has designed, internationally validated and already applied to Spain a comparative instrument for measuring social exclusion created by criminal justice policies in the Western industrialised world. The proposed AP-RIMES project intends to apply the comparative tool in five additional countries: Four populated European countries, that is to say, Germany, United Kingdom, Italy and Poland, and two of the US most populated states California and New York.

The seminar is organised as a one-day closed expert meeting (by invitation only) where academics will discuss various aspects mainly related to the RIMES instrument and its application to their countries. For this purpose, the expert seminar is structured around three keynote speeches. The contribution of all the participants to the discussion will be essential.

The organization of this international seminar rely on José Luís Díez-Ripollés and Elisa García-España, main researchers of the RIMES project, Anabel Cerezo, Director of the Institute of Criminology, as well as the members of the research team from the Institute of Criminology and the Department of Criminal Law, of the University of Malaga.
