Lidia Taillefer de Haya

Profesora Titular de Universidad

Dr Taillefer received a BA in English Philology at Málaga University in Spain (1987) and a MA in Translation at Madrid University (1988). She continued her studies in the US at the City University of New York, where she obtained a MA in Liberal Arts (1989). In 1995 she gained her PhD degree at Madrid University (Complutense). Her teaching, the PhD Dissertations she has supervised and her publications — included in outstanding international bibliographic databases— are on various Applied Linguistics domains such as English Language Teaching, Psycholinguistics, Sociolinguistics and Translation. Head of the research group 'Applied Languages and Linguistics,' she has also coordinated various Innovative Educational studies such as a 'Teaching Project for the Use of Multimedia,' a 'Project on a Multilingual Linguistics Glossary' and a 'Skype Practicum.'

She is currently convenor for a 'Research Network on Academic Writing in English as a Foreign Language' in the International Association of Applied Linguistics. Dr Taillefer also has designed online English for Specific Purposes courses and an Open Course Ware on 'English Applied Linguistics' for Creative Commons. She has collaborated with universities in the United Kingdom (Cambridge, Exeter, Surrey, etc.) and the United States (Harvard University, The City University of New York, The State University of New York, The University of Pennsylvania at Philadelphia, etc.), both as visiting scholar and researcher.
